The monumental Israelite Temple of Trieste was built between 1908 and 1912 , and bears the work of architects Ruggero and Arduino Berlam. The Temple was unveiled in 1912 in the presence of the Emperor and it replaced the four smaller Synagogues that previously existed.

The style has been described as follows:

"The exterior style was said to be late Roman of a type found in the fourth-century Syria, and the architects chose it because it bore them close as possible to ancient Jewish architecture. Jews in the Holy Land and throughout the Roman Empire had used Roman forms. Syria was near enough to the Holy Land to incorporate design elements used by Jews. A synagogue in this style could suggest the wide geographic distribution of Jews, both in the Roman Empire and in modern times. It could suggest the proximity of Jews to others within the ancient and the modern Roman (that is, Hapsburg) empires. It could suggest the Jewish Middle Eastern origin without making them look too close to Byzantine Christians or to Moslems." Carole Herselle Krinsk Synagogues of Europe, P. 372

The card is postmarked 1912 when Trieste was still part of Austria.

The Kaiser's Visit

Special Cancellation of the Austrian Post Office

The Austrians took postal notice of the Kaiser's visit by using violet ink for the postmark of 31-10-98.

The regular black Jerusalem cancellation is shown below for comparison.
