became enveloped in smoke, while targets signalling hits moved up and down like a long row of Jacks-in-the-box. Before noon three men—Sergeant McFie, 1st Renfrew, Colour-Sergeant Hindley, 1st V.B. Oxford, and Sergeant Long, 1st Surrey—had scored 33 points each out of the possible 35, and for some time after that they headed the list. Just before the signal for suspending operations for luncheon, however, Colour-Sergeant Joyce, of the 1st V.B. Berks, began with an inner (after making a magpie as a sighting shot), and then went on making bullseye after bullseye very rapidly, for he was shooting against time. Once or twice it seemed as if he were hurrying overmuch, but this quickness did not disturb his aim, and he finished with six successive bullseyes, thus making his total a well-shot 34. Directly he had done gun-fire put a stop to shooting for a time. Those who were told off to compete after luncheon had rather the best of it in point of weather, as the wind had by that time dropped, so that flags hung heavily about the poles, with only occasional flutters to show which way the gentle breeze blew.

CLOSE FIRING.

Still the scores were not raised much generally, and outers showed more frequent on the marking-boards than bullseyes, until, about four o'clock, Colour-Sergeant Ingram, 3rd Lanark, an old Silver Medallist, put on 34, with an inner for his first shot, and thus rivalled the score of Sergeant Joyce. These two totals were presently equalled by Private A. M'Kinley, 6th Lanark, and Private J. Buchanan, Queen's Edinburgh, but in order of merit yesterday in a way worthy of herself at Greenock and Aberdeen. (Cheers.) She had led the country upon former occasions for 200 years and more, and they hoped she was going to lead it again. (Cheers.) The journey was then resumed, and Dalkeith was reached at half-past five. Before proceeding to the place of meeting, Mr. Gladstone took tea at the residence of Mr. Todd at Eskbank. About a thousand or twelve hundred persons were crowded into the Foresters' Hall.

Mr. GLADSTONE referred to the chairman's allusion to the policy of peace, retrenchment, and reform. He said that though he had been in Ministries which, owing to inherited seeds of entanglement, had been obliged to redeem the national honour in war, at the close of none of the three periods when he had laid down the office of Prime Minister had he handed over to his successor any such entangling engagement as to render it difficult for him to pursue the path of peace. (Cheers.)

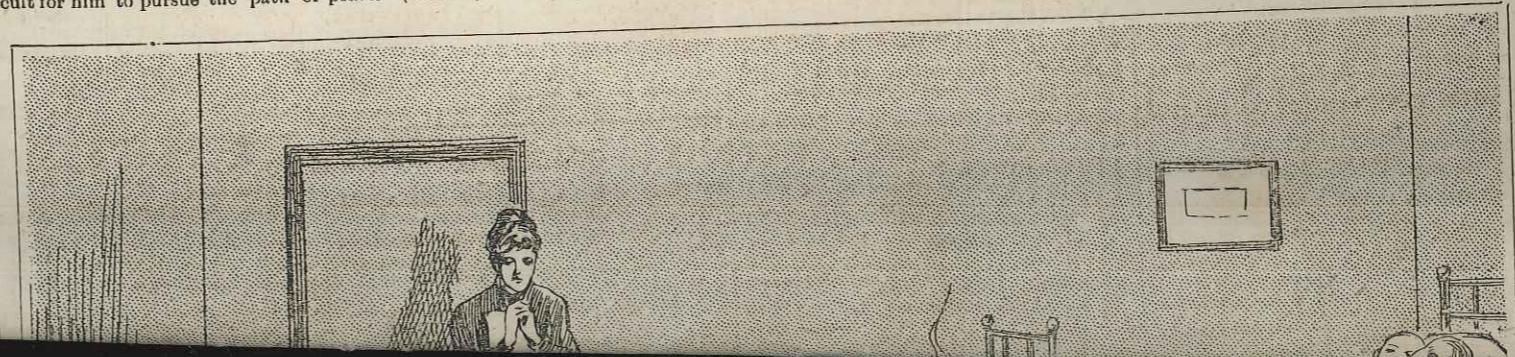

He acknowledged that, compared with the Jingo period, these last six years had shown a considerable approximation of the Tories to Liberal views of policy. As to retrenchment, so wide was the popular franchise that he had not the least doubt that when the people demanded retrenchment they would obtain it. (Cheers.) With regard to reform the Liberals had raised the figure of the electorate from two or three millions to about six millions. (Renewed cheers.)

THE LIBERAL GAINS.

They might like to ask him what he thought of the election returns as far as they had gone. (Loud cheering.) They were such, he could assure them, as would not impair his appetite, digestion, or sleep—(laughter)—and he should be very happy, for the sake of the members of Her Majesty's Government personally, not politically, if they were in a condition to say as much. (Renewed laughter.) According to all the information in his possession, nine seats gained on a total of contests, which was still under sixty, promised what he should call a satisfactory result. He went no further, for "let not him who putteth on his armour boast as he who taketh it off." He waited for further results before speaking with confidence. (Hear, hear.) But these two things he said, that his anticipations were thus far justified, and, secondly, that Scotland had done herself honour in the beginning which she had made. (Cheers.) He now desired to say some words upon Scottish affairs. First he had something to say as to Scottish Home Rule, or rather Scottish Nationalism. (Cheers.) He was not at all certain that Scotland yet knew definitively and determinedly her own mind as to the principles of Home Rule, but of this he was sure—that while Scotland yielded to no portion of the United Kingdom in her fervent attachment to the throne and to the Unity of the Empire, a true, genuine, legitimate spirit of nationalism in Scotland, and a determination to yield no jot or tittle of the just claims of Scotland were as strong at this moment as ever they were at any period of her

ST PETERSBURG

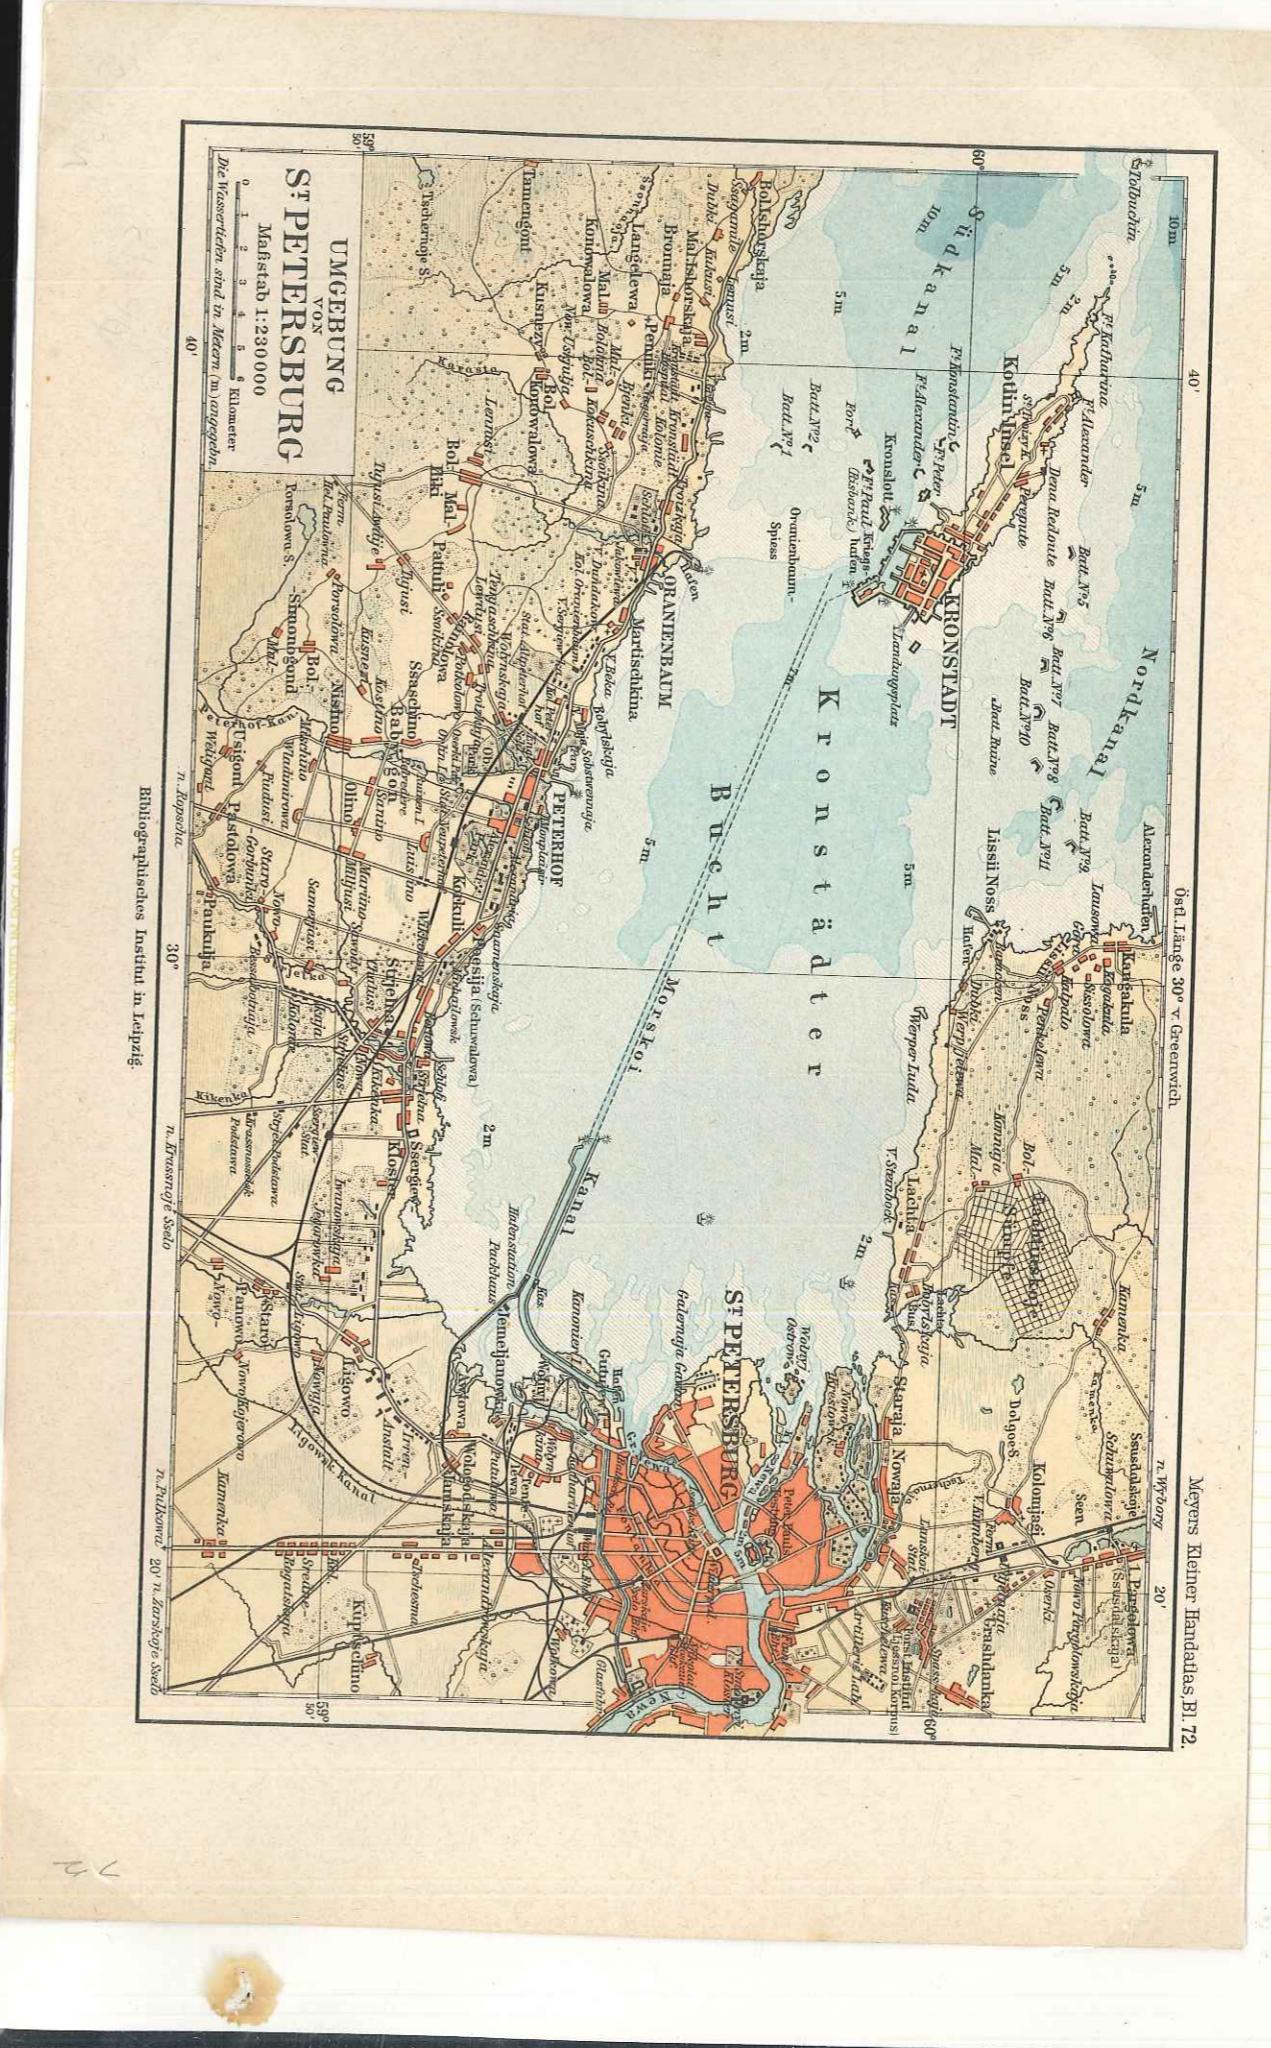

(work started in 1878 and completed in 1895)

Until the Morskoi Kanal was available/ sea-going vessels had to dock at Kronstadt and goods, mail and passengers were carried to St Petersburg in smaller craft. Overseas letters in the 1830s and 1840s bore a Kronstadt 'Steamer' mark.

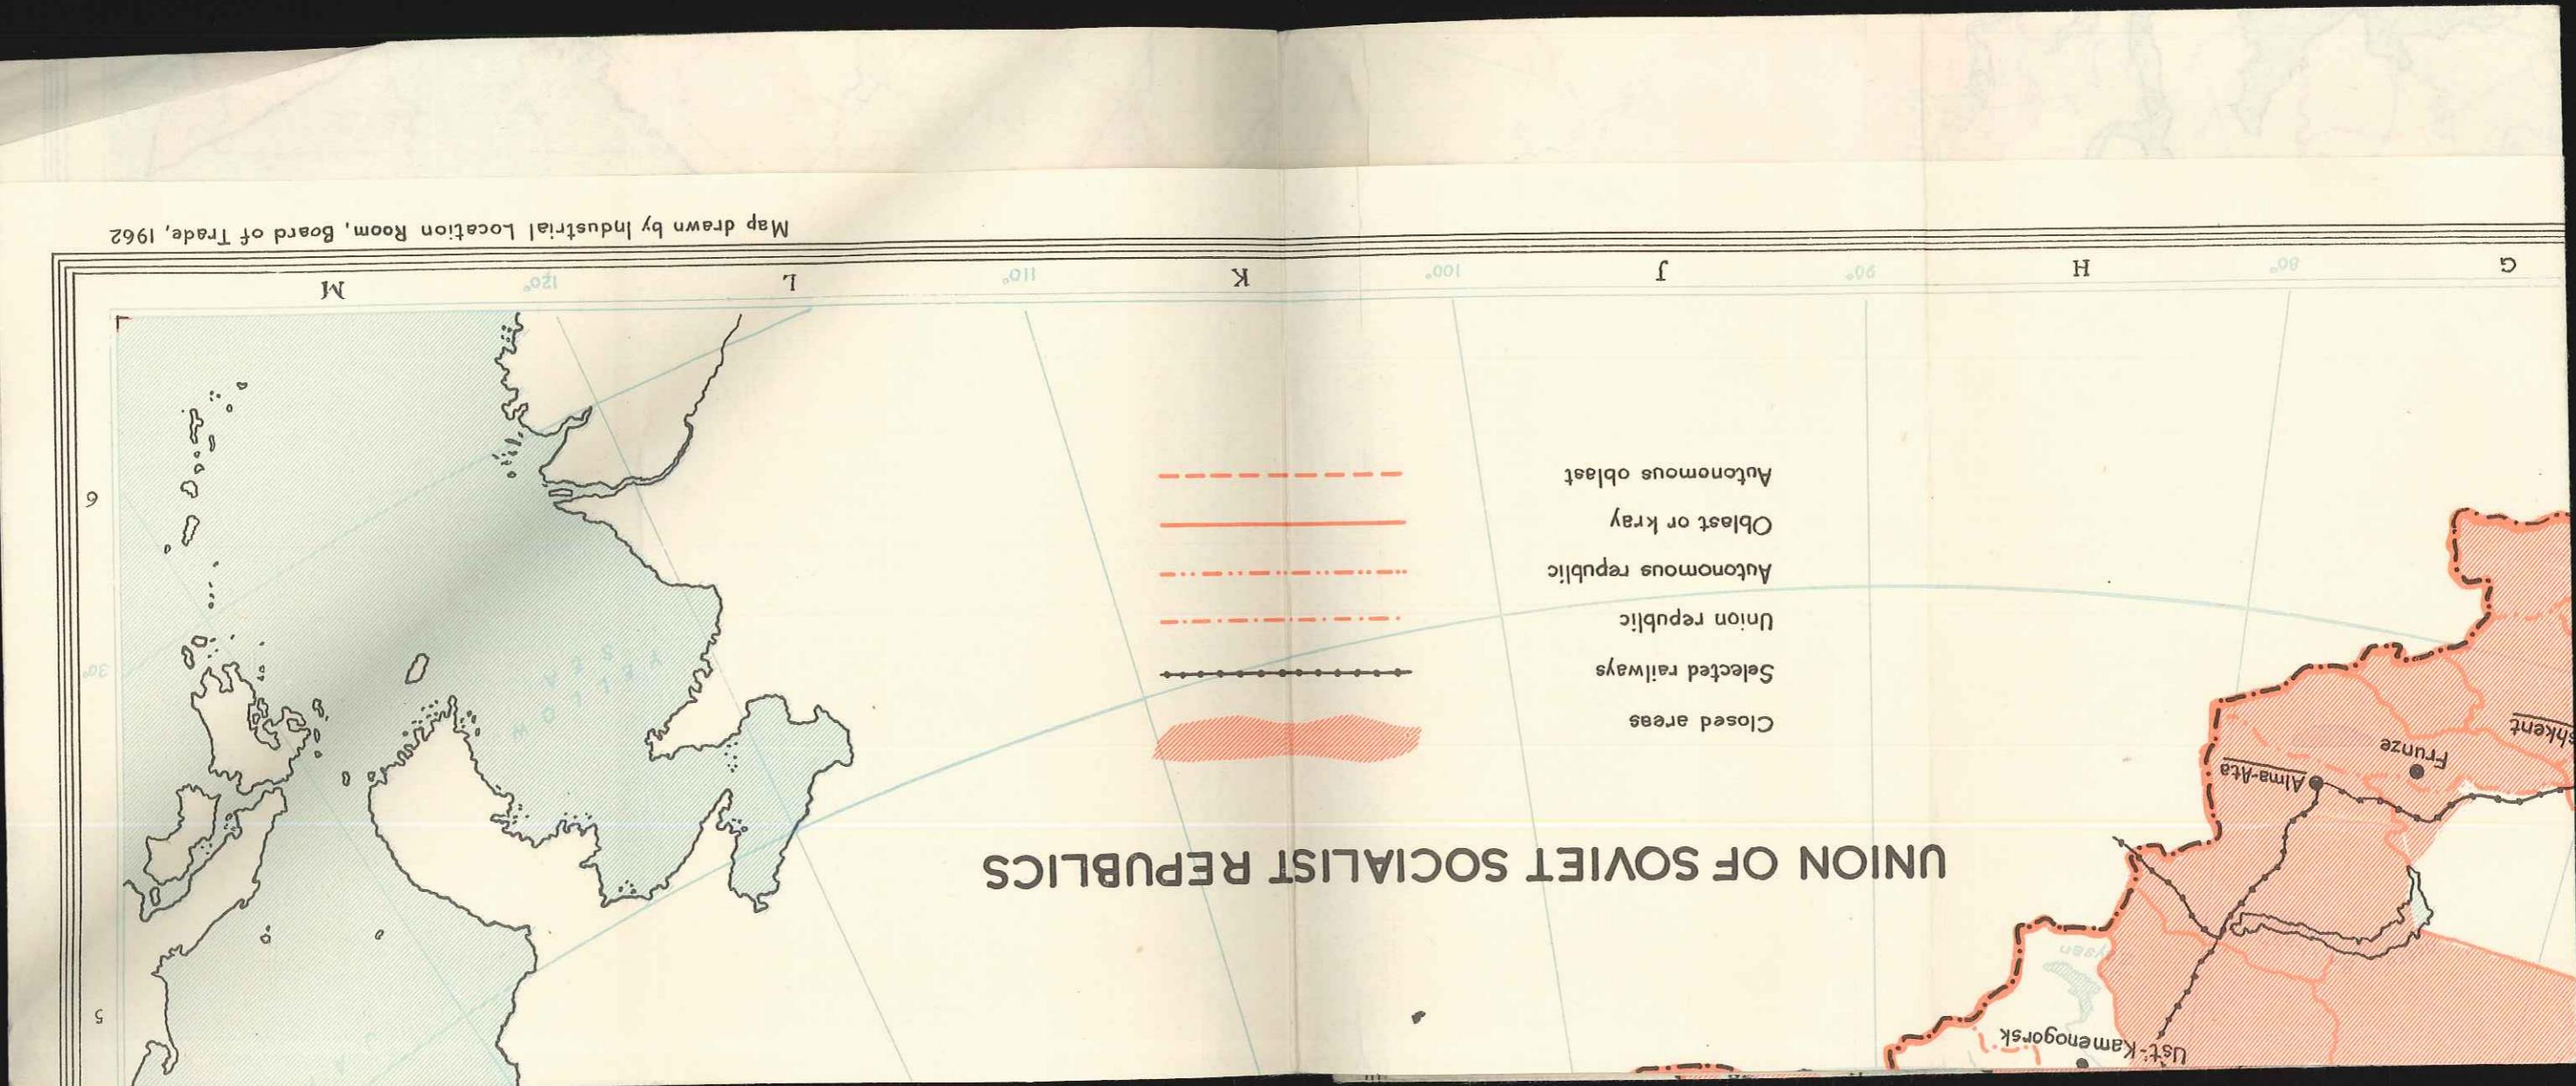

This map, c 1894, shows the Canal, and also the suburban railway line to Peterhof and Oranienbaum.

1896 SHIP MAIL IN THE INDIAN OCEAN

Cover for triple-rate registered letter from carpet merchants in BUKHARA, Russian Central Asia, addressed in English, Russian and Farsi to their office in PESHAWAR, NW frontier region of India (now in Pakistan). On reverse 40k in Arms stamps (3 X 10k plus 10k registration) cancelled BUKHARA Subtype 3A dated 27 1 1896 (= 8 2 96 New Style) and firm's blue oval cachet. Encircled 'R' for registration with number in blue crayon in oval. Routed via ODESSA and BOMBAY. Good luck talisman (arrowed).

Transit mark of SEA POST OFFICE C Mar 2 96 applied at ADEN, indicating carriage on P.& O. mail-carrier s.s. GANGES across the Indian Ocean to BOMBAY (Mumbai) scheduled to arrive 8 Mar 96. Received PESHAWAR CITY 11 March 1896.

The "carpet correspondence" took the long circuitous journey through Europe and the Indian Ocean in preference to the direct but hazardous route across Afghanistan.

1913 SHIP MAIL ON THE RIVER IRTYSH

Ppc of paddle-steamer "MIKHAIL PLOTNIKOV", used by passenger on board the ship to send greetings to BERGEN, Norway "8/21 Oktober 13". Put ashore at PAVLODAR, Semipalatinsk, where 4k stamp cancelled same day.

This ship belonged to the M. Plotnikov & Sons Co., established by the 1890s, one of the smaller companies working the Siberian River Irtysh between Tiumen, Tobolsk, Tara, Omsk, Pavlodar, Semipalatinsk, Ust-Kamenogorsk and Topolev. It had five ships: Mikhail Plotnikov, Andrei Pervozvannyi, Rostislav, Viktoria and Arsenii.

None of these ships had a post office and mail was simply handed over for cancelling and forwarding on shore.
