GEORGE BEST

MANCHESTER UNITED, FULHAM & NORTHERN IRELAND

So much has already been written about George Best. The rise, the fall and the lifestyle. As a man he was burdened by complexities, as a footballer, he made the game look easy.

He arrived at Manchester United as a shy 15 year-old, but he quickly became homesick for his native Belfast and returned home. Only the persuasiveness of Matt Busby convinced him to give it another try.

At 17 he made his first team debut for United and within two years was part of an exciting United team that enjoyed a five year period of success, including a memorable European Cup victory in 1968.

The aura of George Best continued to grow and wherever United played, fans wanted to see the talented Irishman display his unique skills. The balance, speed, poise and goals were all part of what made him so special.

The fame alas, took its toll, as did the responsibility of starring in a United team that by the mid seventies had begun to wane. At the age of 26 after disputes and bust-ups he walked out on United.

A brief fling with Fulham followed, but the best of George had been and gone. What had already been achieved though had established George Best as one of the all time greats.
