A National Resource

The 56-meter-high Koffler Accelerator rising over the Institute campus doesn't look much like a microscope — but in fact that is just what it is! Inside this newly inaugurated first phase of the Canada Centre of Nuclear Physics is a 14 UD Pelletron, a multi-million dollar device which enables physicists to peer right into the heart of the atom.

The striking 21st century structure, designed by Israel architect Moshe Harel, is made up of two sections. One tower encloses the accelerator itself and is topped by a two-storey egg-shaped dome that contains a giant 22 x 14 meter ion source laboratory on one level and a visitors' gallery, encircled by floor-to-ceiling windows, on the other. Alongside and joined to the accelerator tower at six points stands its twin, holding the "guts" of the building — cables, piping, emergency staircase, and the elevators for freight and passengers who, separated and protected from radiation, can move up and down with impunity.

A new national resource, the Canada Centre of Nuclear Physics will be operated jointly by the Weizmann Institute, the Hebrew University and Ben-Gurion University. Explains Prof. Gviral Goldring, the Lady Davis Professor of Experimental Physics, who coordinated the accelerator project and heads the Canada Centre: "As one of the most advanced experimental tools in existence, unique in its capabilities and performance, the Koffler Accelerator will serve physicists both here and abroad and provide Israel with an excellent training ground for tomorrow's scientists."
