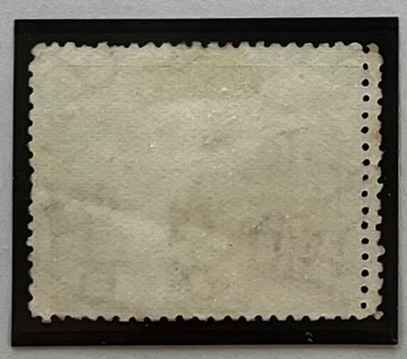
Double Perforations

If an original line of perforations was badly misplaced, a second line might be run more accurately through the sheet. As this would occur during the regular perforating process, the gauge remained unchanged.



Tasmania

Mixed Perforations

An inspection might reveal missing lines of perforation, in which case the sheet would be sent back to the perforator who might not necessarily use the original perforating machine.

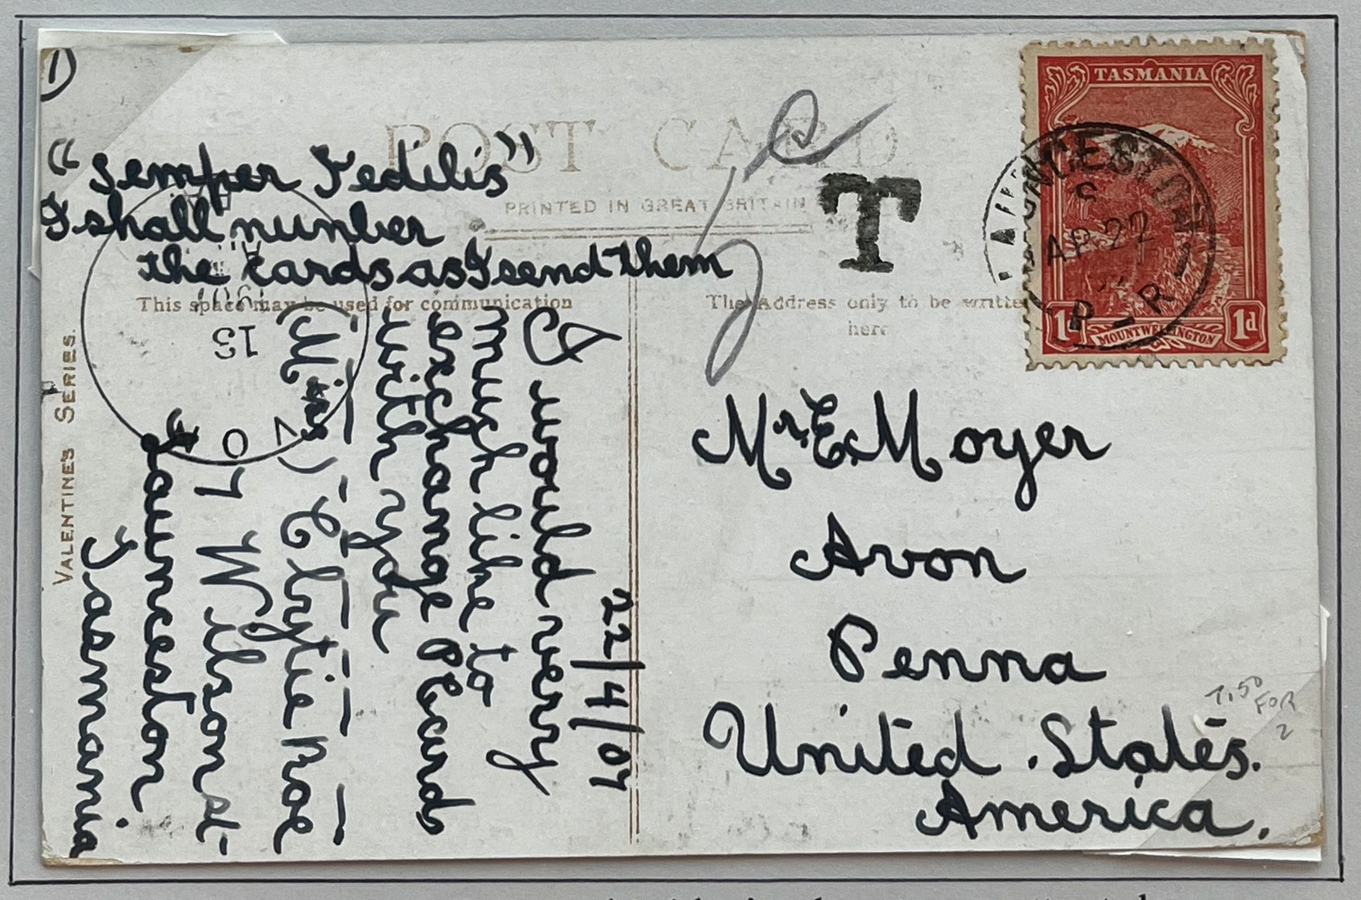
U.P.U. Postcard Rate

Postcard to USA sent at correct 1 ½ d rate.

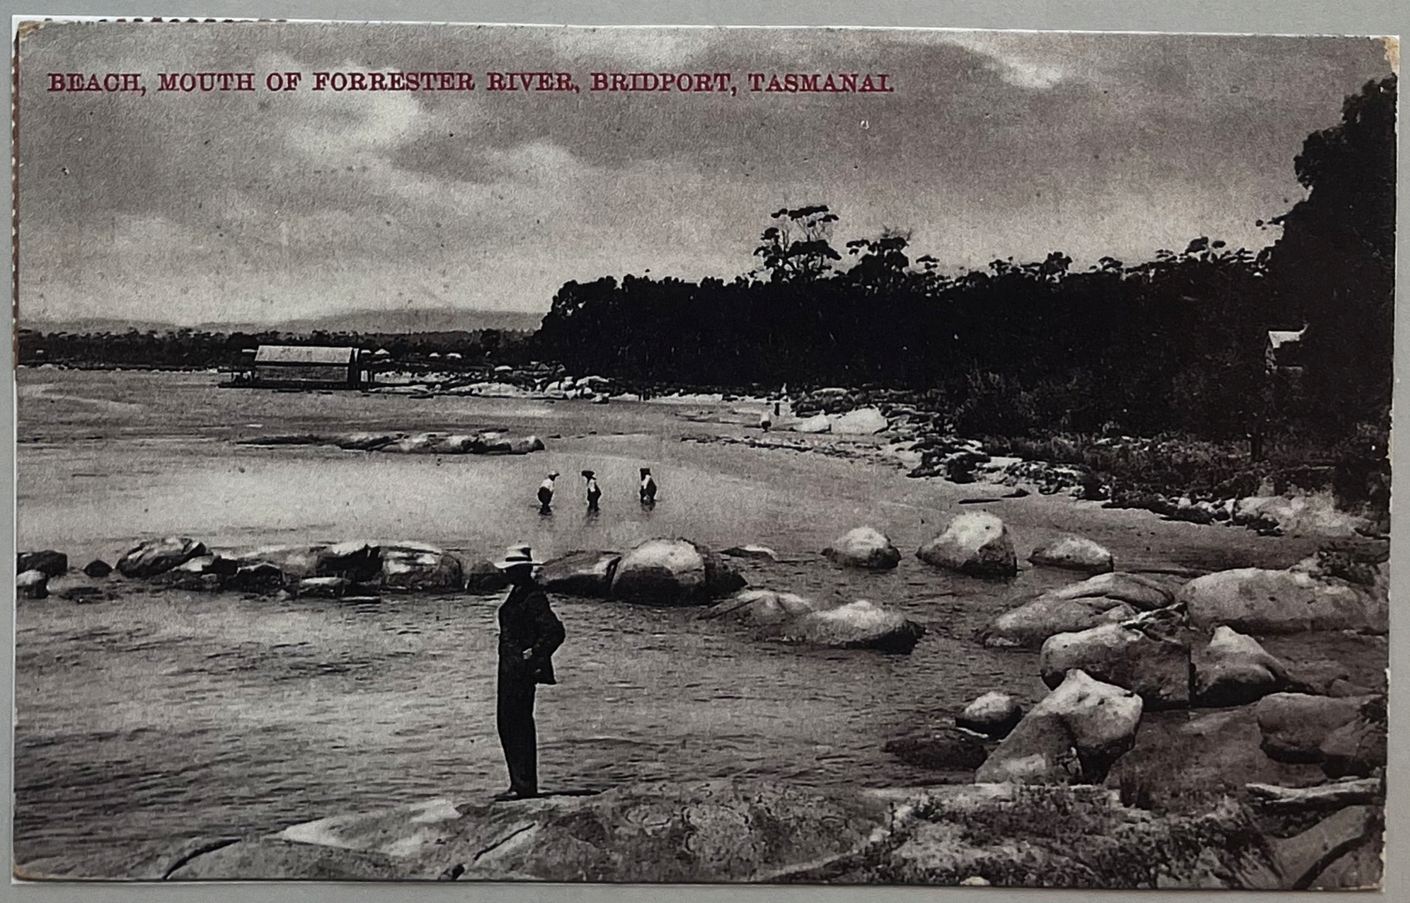


Attempt to send postcard at 1d printed matter rate attracted Tasmanian "T" marking and manuscript "5c" postage due.

Tasmania

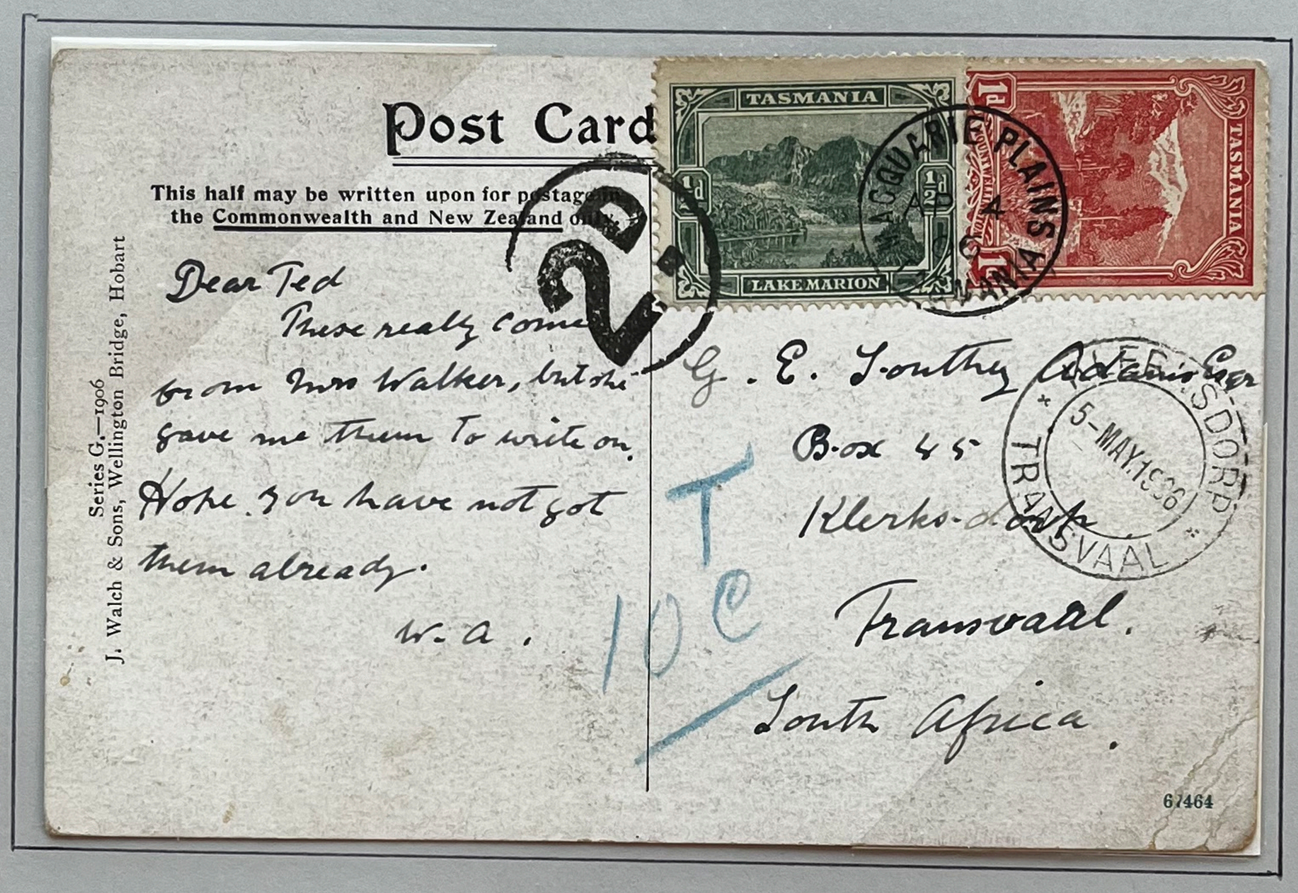
Postage Due Mail

Post card from "Scottsdale JA 29 08 Tasmania" to Austria. At the 1906 Rome Congress of the UPU, it was agreed that, as from 1st October 1907, all underpaid mail was to be marked with double the deficiency in the country of origin, rather than at the destination as before. This post card shows the Tasmanian "T" marking. Underpaid by ½ d, the deficiency was doubled to 10 centimes, and converted to 10 Heller on arrival.



Tasmania

Letter Rate to Transvaal



Postcard posted at Macquarie Plains, April 4, 1906, to Klerksdorp, Transvaal, 5 May arrival cancel, franked at the 1 ½ d UPU postcard rate. Transvaal was not a member of the "Commonwealth and New Zealand" (the Commonwealth referred to being the "Commonwealth of Australia"), therefore the written note subjected the postcard to the 2 ½ d letter rate, and it was taxed 2d, equal to double the 1d deficiency.

The rule against a message on the address side in international correspondence was dropped at the 1906 Rome Congress of the UPU, and in June of that year Australia gave instructions for the new rule to be put into effect without delay.

Inland Letter Rate

A 2d Pictorial pays the inland letter rate on this cover from J & T Gunn Ltd., Launceston, to Campbell Town, with next-day "JU 21" backstamp. Founded in 1875 by brothers John and Thomas Gunn, the company is one of Australia's oldest, and today, is Tasmania's largest private landowner with over 900 square kilometers of plantations, mainly eucalyptus.

Blotchy Printing
Waterlow paper, Crown/A watermark

In January-February 1910 blotchy printings were made in a dull grey-violet. Very scarce, they were devoid of shading lines, probably due to clotting of an unsuitable ink or dirt clogging the printing surface. First considered to be a product of new lithographic plates, they received temporary catalog recognition by Stanley Gibbons. Following the cleaning of the plates and introduction of a new, bright violet ink, the printings were generally as sharp as the originals, revealing that wear was not a contributor to the blotchy printing.

Stereotypes, Watermarked Crown over A

Late in 1912 it became obvious that insufficient 1d. stamps were on hand to meet normal demand until the Australian Commonwealth stamps were released in 1913. The Government Printer, Mr. J.B. Cooke, decided to overprint some 2d. stereotypes, which were more abundant.

Tasmania

Interstate Postmarks

Most interstate postmarks before 13 October 1910 were applied on ship mail, e.g. Tasmania cancels on Victoria stamps applied at Hobart, Launceston, Burnie, or Strahan, the four main ports of the era. Tasmanian stamps with non-Tasmanian cancels are usually found with transit or arrival markings from interstate or overseas points of entry, e.g. Melbourne, Sydney, Newcastle, Bluff (New Zealand) etc.

Tasmania

Interstate Postmarks

On 13 October 1910 the stamps of each State became valid for use in every State.

Official Perfins

The Federal Post and Telegraph Rates Act of 1902 abolished all free postage arrangements for government authorities. Tasmania State government departments began using stamps perforated "T." Produced in tow operations by a single row perforator, little care was given to the registration of the vertical and horizontal rows, resulting in a variety of punchings, some of which bear little resemblance to a T.

"V over Crown" Watermark

When the Victorian Government Printing Office took over printing of Tasmanian stamps, no further supply of "TAS" watermarked paper was available. They chose to use a paper supplied by Waterlow & Sons of Great Britian, which was in stock for printing Victoria's stamps. This paper was watermarked V over Crown.

Tasmania's Private Pictorial Letter Cards

Patrick Reid

Many years ago I first came across one of these letter cards and thought it was attractive. I resolved to pick them up whenever I found one, but they do not come very often. After about 20 years I have managed to accumulate nine. However, I now have enough to be able to establish that there are different types and minor variations.

The basic lettercard comes in two types, with Type 1 printed on white/cream stock (Fig. 1, at right), measuring 115 x 93 mm (folded). It opens out to reveal a letter sheet and four small pictures on the side flaps and measures 242 x 182 mm overall (Fig. 2, page 2). There is also a picture on the back (Fig. 4, page 3).

The pictures, including the one on the back, are similar to those on contemporary postcards, suitably adjusted for size. Not all cards are the same, and I have examples of the following views:

Corra Lynne
Government House, Hobart
Hobart from the Bay
In Franklin Square, Hobart
Mount Wellington from Huon Road
Princes' Square
River Derwent at New Norfolk
St Patrick's River
South Esk River
The Tamar, Launceston

The letter cards found so far are in two consistent sets, Type 1 with The Tamar, Launceston on the back and one featuring the remaining pictures. These lettercards have a perforated edge where the folded card could be opened, and these appear to be perf 13. The perforation is difficult to measure clearly because it is often obscured by the remains of the flap along which the perforation was made.

A Study of the Tasmania Lithographed Halfpenny Pictorial with OS Perfin

Original Research

Jerry Weirich

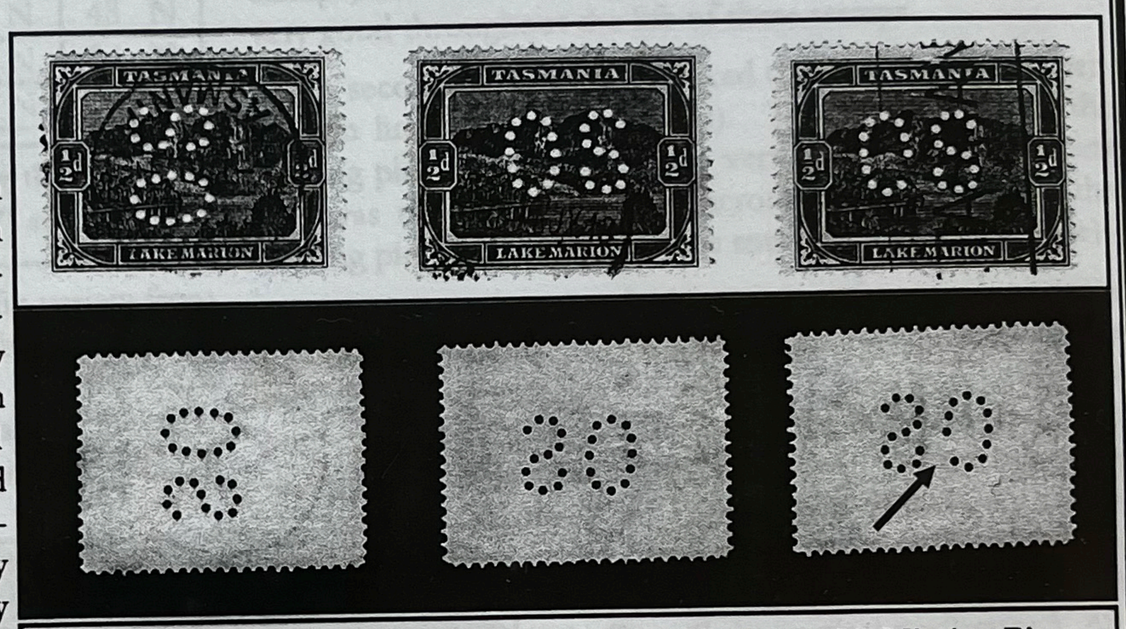

Fig. 1: "OS" Sideways, "OS" Upright, "OS" Upright with Missing Pin

About 20 months ago, the Tasmanian Philatelic Society launched an online bulletin board (www.tps.org.au/bb/) for sharing information and collaborating on anything associated with Tasmanian stamps. One of the early topics was a discussion on the Commonwealth OS perfin variety with a missing pin. Figure 1 shows the two types of normal OS perfins and the OS missing pin variety. The primary discussion focused on understanding how many different issues had the perfin variety. My interest is plating the Tasmanian lithographed pictorials so I was curious about 1) how many different positions in a pane of stamps actually had the variety? and 2) what were the positions?

I chose to start with the lithographed halfpenny pictorial because there were only two printing plates and the stamps were printed in two panes of 60 (10 rows of 6 stamps). I also have (or have seen) the most OS perfins on this value compared to any of the other pictorial stamps. In addition, I believed if I could determine the plate positions of the missing pin variety on the halfpenny, that could help determine the plate positions on other pictorial values which have the variety – particularly the lithographed 2-penny pictorial which had 28 different plates and very few positioned stamps.

My first step was to contact the SAS/O librarian and to get all available literature on the OS perfin. A review of the literature answered the first question on how many OS varieties existed – 6 per pane, and all 6 in one row for a total of 12 different positions across the two panes.[1]

I didn't find any literature that reported the specific sheet positions, but that was easily determined by examining the stamps. All the lithographed halfpenny stamps can be positioned (or plated), and after examining the stamps with the missing pin variety, I found they were all from row 6 of the pane or positions 31 through 36. I was able to examine 17 copies of the OS variety and can confirm they
